

IMPORTANCE OF TOLERANCE

Tolerance is very important in the case of religion. How people worship is a very personal thing and someone bashing a person's religion can.

People from diverse backgrounds can be found in every job field, and a child that cannot accept differences in others will suffer in the future. Freedom is having the opportunity to believe in something, having our own personal opinion about a certain thing without being influenced or forced to do it. The global adventure is that of human beings of different religions, ethnicities, languages and beliefs collaborating together in their spectacular diversity to dream the same dreams. By simply accepting that humans are naturally diverse in their approaches, appearance, values and behaviours, and yet have the right to live in peaceful co-existence, we would be one step closer to instigating peace in the dangerous chapter our world has entered into. The world could have been a better place if religious leaders had promoted more tolerance than hatred. In fact, it is the only way in which a country as diverse as Lebanon politically, religiously, economically can function and use each and every difference to make its people thrive rather than suffer. Tolerance and peace can help solve many problems, and wars are one thing that can be stopped by inducing these qualities. A world without tolerance is a world without peace, and a world without peace is a threat to our very existence. How co-existence is structured can vary widely. Growing up in a country like India enchants one with several signs of cultural pluralism. Do you recognize those phrases? The importance of tolerance in society can not be emphasized enough in a world where there is one place or another in a state of war. When a child learns to be open-minded about the various cultures, foods, people, and faiths surrounding them, the easier it will be for them to accept others when they get older. Many a time, we see people develop mutual enmity just because they are hurt from words said by others about their religious and holy personalities or those things which they hold sacred. Another important piece of information for parents to keep in mind, is making sure that they teach their children to respect themselves. Learn more at www. There is a huge diversity of thought, and that is what makes this world so interesting and beautiful, otherwise freedom would not exist, and we would become slaves of a tyrannical regime, and as our past has taught us, that is not a happy story. We have to be tolerant to any kind of culture whether it is as the Promised Messiah has said a Hindu culture in a Muslim society or a Muslim culture in a Hindu society. God has, by nature, induced love and humility in the hearts of His creation; the problem comes when they remain ignorant and deprived of education which is imperative in understanding values of society thereby creating chaos and intolerance. This is an area where a little tolerance would go a long way. Learning to be tolerant and respectful of others is key to being successful in life. Therefore, not just a respect for difference but an acceptance of it would ensure that our diversity is the source of our strength, rather than a weakness. In this age of globalisation, where people of different backgrounds, cultures and religions live together, and where the world has become multicultural and full of diversity, establishing tolerance and harmony has become very crucial and fostering mutual love and affection has become vital. In fact, it is the only way in which a country as diverse as Lebanon politically, religiously, economically can function and use each and every difference to make its people thrive rather than suffer. More people from different nations, cultures, religions and lifestyles are working together and living in the same neighborhoods than ever before. Loyalty is born from feelings of love and affection. More people from different nations, cultures, religions and lifestyles are working together and living in the same neighborhoods than ever before. The world is incredibly globalized, and children will cross paths with an individual who has different beliefs and ideologies at some point in their lives. This has caused not only the separation between nations, but between people all around the world. Because people are travelling more and working in different countries, there is a strong need for information about the different cultures that exist. To foster a spirit of tolerance, it is important to engage in a diverse outlook of knowledge, openness, communication, freedom of thought, conscience and belief. This is why we believe tolerance is important: because it is an essential aspect of a healthy, livable society.
